WELCOME TO METRO.US!

LENYON WHITAKER, MULTIMEDIA EDITOR

Happy Monday! It might be your least favorite day of the week, but today is an exception. For the first time in 38 years, we will get to experience a total solar eclipse. Many people in this region won't get to see the full effect, but there will be several live streams of the eclipse happening online. Find out how to watch at metro.us/news.

COMIC ICON AND ACTOR JERRY LEWIS DIES AT 91

1 Jerry Lewis, the high prince of low-brow comedy on stage and in movies as well as a fund-raising powerhouse with his annual Labor Day telethon, died on Sunday of "natural causes" at the age of 91, his family said. "Famed comedian, actor and legendary entertainer Jerry Lewis passed away peacefully today of natural causes at 91 at his home in Las Vegas with his family by his side," a statement from the Lewis family said. He starred in more than 45 films in a career spanning five decades. His cross-eyed antics often drew scorn from critics but he was for a time a box-office hit who commanded one of the biggest salaries in Hollywood.

SPAIN ATTACK SUSPECT MAY BE IN FRANCE

2 Spanish police hunting for a suspect after the Barcelona van attack that killed 13 people said on Sunday they could not rule out that he had slipped over the border into France. Spanish police said security operations were under way in Catalonia and on the French border as they try to find Moroccan-born Younes Abouyaaqoub, 22, who they believe to be the only one of 12 suspects still at large. Others have been arrested, shot by police or killed in an explosion at a house in Catalonia a day before Thursday's van attack on Las Ramblas, Barcelona's most famous boulevard. "We don't have any specific information on this but it cannot be ruled out," Catalan police chief Josep Lluis Trapero told a news conference in Barcelona when asked if Abouyaaqoub could have crossed into France.

TRUMP HAS STRATEGY ON AFGHANISTAN

4 President Donald Trump has made a decision on the United States' strategy for Afghanistan after a "sufficiently rigorous" review process, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis said on Sunday. However, Mattis did not provide details on when the White House would make an announcement or what the decision was on Afghanistan, where fighting still rages more than 15 years after U.S. forces invaded and overthrew a Taliban government. Soon after taking office in January, the Trump administration began a review of U.S. policy on Afghanistan, which has expanded into a broader South Asia review. "I am very comfortable that the strategic process was sufficiently rigorous and did not go in with a pre-set position," Mattis told reporters traveling with him aboard a military aircraft to Jordan.

US INDIANAPOLIS FOUND 18K FEET DEEP IN PACIFIC

5 Researchers have found the wreckage of the U.S. warship Indianapolis, which was sunk by a Japanese torpedo in the final days of World War II, more than 18,000 feet below the surface of the Pacific Ocean, the Navy said. The cruiser was returning from its mission to deliver components for the atomic bomb that would soon be dropped on the Japanese city of Hiroshima when it was fired upon in the North Pacific Ocean by a Japanese submarine on July 30, 1945. It sunk in 12 minutes, according to the Naval History and Heritage Command in Washington. No distress signal was sent. About 800 of the 1,196 crew members aboard survived the sinking, but only 316 were rescued alive five days later, with the rest lost to exposure, dehydration, drowning and sharks.

Solar eclipse: Smithsonian astronomer explains why it's cool

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Are you excited about Monday's solar eclipse? Though not quite a once-in-a-lifetime event, the phenomenon is special. Kathy Reeves, an astronomer at the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics who is involved with the operation of NASA telescopes, took some time to talk to Metro about the event before she headed to Oregon to get a better view of the total eclipse.

What makes this eclipse so special?
This is the first ellipse to cross the U.S. since 1918. There have been eclipses in the U.S. since then, but this is the first one that goes coast to coast since 1918, and that's pretty cool. It means a lot of people are going to be able to see the totality, the part where the moon completely covers the sun.

How is this different from other eclipses?
Total eclipses happen every couple of years or so, but the location is really the interesting part of this eclipse. The last eclipse that happened in the continental U.S. happened in 1979 (there was one in Hawaii in 1991). It only went over Oregon and Washington in the northern part of the Pacific Northwest. It was similar, but it covered a smaller part of the U.S., so fewer people would have had access to that.

What do you experience during a total eclipse?
It gets dark and it's not quite the same as when it gets dark at night. There's still a little bit of light coming from the sun, the outer layer called the corona. The light has this very strange twilight kind of quality, and it does get a little cooler [in temperature]. Depending on where you are, there might be changes with the birds. We were in Australia for the last one and we noticed the birds stopped chirping.

A solar eclipse will hit on Monday, Aug. 21. GETTY IMAGES

Why is it worth it to see an eclipse?
It's just a beautiful natural event. Pictures don't do it justice. Having the whole experience is really exciting — seeing it and feeling it and hearing it and being in a group of people all excited about it as it's happening is really cool. As soon as you see a total eclipse, you think to yourself, "Wow, I gotta do that again."

Where to watch the solar eclipse in Boston

For Bostonians the upcoming total eclipse of the sun will be more like a partial eclipse of the sun — Boston is about 15 hours from closest prime viewing locations in South Carolina.

The solar eclipse will sweep across the United States at 2:43 p.m. on Monday, Aug. 21 from Oregon to Georgia, leaving Bostonians well out of range to see the total eclipse, but a partial eclipse will still be visible as the moon passes in front of the sun.

Boston is still ready to party, though, and Lyft is offering customers up to $10 off on eclipse day.

There are a few locations that will be celebrating the eclipse on Monday, but you'll have to pick just one, as the eclipse will only last for a brief two minutes and 35 seconds:

- Boston Public Library in Copley Square
- Boston Public Library Adams Street branch
- Mattapan Branch of the Boston Public Library
- Chelsea Public Library
- Boston Children's Museum
- Kresge Oval at MIT
- Centennial Common at Northeastern University
- The Blue Hill Observatory and Science Center.

HOW TO WATCH

Here's how to watch the eclipse without harming your vision
It's sure to be an awe-inspiring sight, but looking directly at an eclipse could actually damage your eyesight, according to NASA.

It's safe to look at the total solar eclipse — or the moment when the moon completely passes in front of the sun.

"As the moon moves in front of the sun, there comes a time when several bright points of light shine around the moon's edges," NASA advises on its website.

The beads disappear until there's only a bright spot that looks "like a giant diamond ring," according to NASA. "It is still not safe to look at the sun at this point! Only when that bright spot completely disappears can you safely look at the sun."

This period is short, so be sure to keep your eye on the moon as it moves. Put your glasses back on when that happens, or use an indirect method to watch, like by looking at nearby trees.

Viewing glasses are safe if they're made in the United States by Rainbow Symphony, Thousand Oaks, TSE or American Paper Optics, according to NASA.

TOM FOREMAN

Analysis

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

All those patently false statements President Trump has made about — well, all kinds of things? Forget them. The vicious and at times violent words he heaves at his foes? Never mind. His explicitly distasteful statements about women, his disdain for members of his own party, the chaos in the White House, the Russian questions, his still hidden tax returns and his growing list of legislative setbacks? Who cares?

His die-hard supporters are apparently not the least bit concerned. Indeed, in a new Monmouth University poll, six in 10 people who approve of how Trump is doing his job say they can't imagine anything that would change their minds. Let that sink in: They can't imagine anything that would change their minds.

When he bragged during the election "I could stand in the middle of Fifth Avenue and shoot somebody, and I wouldn't lose voters," I thought it was hyperbole. But now it sounds like, at least with a slice of his base, he was absolutely right. And yet I admit, I find the kind of loyalty expressed in that poll baffling.

Because political history is overflowing with tales of failure, scandal and betrayals from which no party has ever been immune. Great leaders have descended into cauldrons of ignominy, just as weak "also rans" have risen to acclaim. Sure, I know some people have natural faith in God. Some people never doubt for a moment the love of their families. Some have unending trust in their dogs or a heartfelt belief the Phillies are about to bounce back.

I understand that. People can have deep-seated, personal history with those kinds of subjects, experiences on which to base their trust. And I'm not saying the president's supporters are in any way wrong to stand by their man. It's a free, democratic country. They have every right. But I find it strange when people expressly say they highly doubt they will ever change their opinions when circumstances can change so easily.

Of course, that poll found that roughly the same number of those who disapprove of Trump's performance also can't imagine changing their minds. And that's a whole other point of view worth pondering.

Experts forecast 'spectacular' fall foliage for New England

Even if you can't believe it, autumn is already around the corner. Lucky for New Englanders, this year's season is expected to offer "spectacular" fall foliage.

Yankee Magazine is releasing its annual fall foliage forecast on Friday and the publication predicts a stunning season that is sure to draw leaf peepers from afar.

Though some may think the changing leaves always put on a noteworthy show, there have actually been some hindrances in past seasons, like drought or damaging gypsy moth caterpillars. Even the summer temperatures and rainfalls can affect what colors appear in autumn.

But this year, nothing seems to be in the way of a colorful fall.

"It's the most optimistic forecast I've had in a couple of years," Jim Salge, who tracks the New England foliage for Yankee Magazine, told the Associated Press.

According to the magazine, everything is in place for a "strong and vibrant" display.

"Since spring, the weather in New England has been fairly stable. There have been no long stretches of unbearable heat, nor have temperatures been below average. Rainfall has been adequate but not extreme," the magazine predicts.

"The setup looks good overall for New England's fall foliage display this year. The forest appears generally healthy and leaf development has been normal," the forecasts continues. "The upshot: In New England, normal fall colors are expected to be spectacular."

Jeff Folger, who goes by the name "Jeff Foliage" and both photographs and reports on the turning leaves, began his 2017 fall foliage forecast back in January to allow leaf peepers ample time to plan their vacations.

These celebrity couples met on set

Ah, celebrity couples. We do dish so much about them here. Sometimes, they're goals AF. Other times it's like, oh yeah, you guys exist? That's chill.

But then again, celebrities are just like us. Sometimes they meet someone on the job — it's just not by the watercooler, it's in front of the cameras. And then they get together. And then, sometimes, they stay together. It's kind of wild, you know?

We collected 15 couples that met on set — from Channing Tatum and Jenna Dewan Tatum to Eva Mendes and Ryan Gosling. Head over to Metro.us/entertainment to see them all.

The coupliest of on-set couples.

Robin Thicke knocked up his GF

Over the weekend, Robin Thicke's girlfriend, a 22-year-old named April Love Geary, announced that she's got a gut full of the 40-year-old's baby. Cool, I guess!

Geary announced the news on Instagram, as you do. With a sonogram, of course. "Robin and I are very excited to share with you all that we're having a baby! The due date is March 1st, Alan's birthday!"

Aw.

She also shared a picture of her three-month bump — which, for what it's worth, looks a lot like me after I have a burrito.

The pair has been dating since 2014. Thicke already has a kid, Julian, with his ex-wife Paula Patton. They are like, still in the midst of a nasty custody battle.

But congratulations to Thicke — a man who dressed up as Beetlejuice and let Miley Cyrus twerk on him that one time — on your baby and your hot young thing, bb!

Hooray, I guess?

Is this why Elon and Amber broke up?

Amber Heard and Elon Musk called it quits a few weeks ago, citing busy schedules.

Now Star — I know, so take it with several grains of salt — is reporting that the reason behind their breakup may or may not be much more sinister. Sources tell the magazine that it was "close encounters of the come-hither kind that sealed her fate," whatever that means.

According to the mag, "friends did try to warn Musk that Johnny Depp's ex-wife was a golddigger dressed in hand-me-downs. 'Elon had to learn that the hard way,' says the pal. 'He couldn't see it at first, but Amber was just using him.'"

Listen. Maybe Amber is attracted to rich men, but Elon is sure attracted to beautiful, young women who ruin seminal films like "Magic Mike." We call this a "mutually beneficial" relationship.

Ugh, these two again.

Anyway, these two drama queens were already spotted having breakfast together, after announcing their breakup, so who even knows. Could be tomfoolery. But it looks like they're both just a mess.

My vote? Girl, I guess.

Elisabeth Moss defends Scientology

Elisabeth Moss, star of "The Handmaid's Tale," is a Scientologist. She rarely talks about it — but recently she defended her religion of choice via Instagram. Mmkay!

A user who chose the moniker moelybanks wrote asking whether or not "The Handmaid's Tale" makes Moss think twice about Scientology. Because, they wrote, "both Gilead and Scientology both believe that all outside sources [aka news] are wrong or evil."

Obviously, though, Moss disagreed.

"That's actually not true at all about Scientology," Moss replied, very politely. "Religious freedom and tolerance and understanding the truth and equal rights for every race, religion and creed are extremely important to me," she wrote, although an "LOL, actually" likely would have sufficed. "The most important things to me probably. And so Gilead and THT hit me on a very personal level."

So polite! Also, such a non-answer.

Oh well. We'll always have hot Max Minghella and his portrayal of Nick.

Breakfast pasta is on the menu at Vialé

Head to Central Square for chocolate fettuccine.

Feast on the duck-egg carbonara. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Check out the potato gnocchi at Vialé.

From eggs Benedict and rotating omelets to glorious sides of home fries and bacon, Vialé in Central Square has brunch staples covered. But, as any daring Italian eatery should do, it's pushing the culinary boundaries by featuring four types of breakfast pastas.

"We wanted to differentiate ourselves from everyone else," says executive chef and co-owner Greg Reeves. The restaurant is known for its pasta dishes, so Reeves thought incorporating them into the daytime fare was the logical next step.

The lineup, served Saturdays and Sundays from 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., includes duck-egg carbonara, ricotta cavatelli, potato gnocchi and the rich and decadent chocolate fettucine.

"We all know you can have dessert for breakfast, so we wanted to do a twist on that," explains Reeves. "There's cocoa powder in the pasta, and we top it with coconut and a peanut butter glaze. It looks like a candy bar, and it's the best combination ever."

The three savory options are equally delectable for those with less of a sweet tooth. The duck-egg carbonara, with eggs in the sauce and a poached duck egg on top, packs a protein punch with crispy pancetta as well. The gnocchi is rather adventurous with a wild boar bolognese and grana cheese, while the ricotta cavatelli is the rotating vegetarian option.

Make your brunch a boozy one with one of Vialé's signature cocktails, too. The "prosecco correcto" blends perfumed grappa di moscato and muscat grape shrub with notes of lavender while the "school's out" will wake you up with Earl Grey montenegro and gin. "Victim of Venus" features a floral, blueberry-infused cocchi rosa as well as amaretto and creme de violette.

Reeves wants his guests to enjoy this special brunch menu, as he "let his hair down a bit and went off key" when creating these exciting pasta innovations.

And create a kick-ass side gig.

SARA FEINSTEIN
@SaraBFeinstein
sara.feinstein@metro.us

Working as an office administrator pays the bills, but if sitting at a computer answering the phone isn't lighting your creative fire, you can feel stuck. Maybe you've always wanted to start a fashion line or catering business, but didn't know exactly how to transform the idea into action.

You're not the first person who's bided her time in a dead-end gig while dreaming of something else. So, before that placeholder job becomes a resentment-filled rut, check out these tips from "Girl Boss" author Stacey Kravetz, who's mastered making the leap from 9-to-5 grind to self-starting entrepreneur.

Make a passion plan

Finding an entrepreneurial project to pursue it simple, says Kravetz. All you have to do is follow the ideas that consume your mind when it wanders. "If you should be working on your big project for school, but instead you find yourself taking breaks, googling Etsy and looking at the ways that people are designing, painting and marketing ceramic mugs and bowls — that's the thing that you should think about turning into some sort of business," she explains. After all, you have to start by loving it.

Build an authentic brand image

Your brand's identity should be shaped around what's authentic to you. "If on social media you like to post funny observations you make about things going on in the world, and people start to gravitate toward you because they like your sense of humor, then you should use that same sense of humor when you're marketing your business," explains Kravetz."You don't want to feel like you're posting the same thing over and over, saying, 'Here's my jewelry company, look at my product.' " Instead, if you're at a fair with a group of people selling your hand-crafted necklaces, upload a picture from the scene, says the expert. Maybe you have a drink in your hand, or you're wearing a nice floral outfit, "you want your audience to say, 'Oh, she drinks iced' or, 'Look, she's wearing a cute dress,' " says Kravetz. "You want them to see that slice of personal."

Fake it 'til you make it

It's not uncommon when starting a company to end up in a situation where you're asked to do something you've never done before. Even if you haven't got a clue about where to begin, "a lot of the times you have to just say 'yes I can do it—no problem,' and then figure it out from there," says Kravetz. If a potential sponsor is asking you to write up a business plan and you're not even sure what that is, "just go online and look at examples," says the expert. "Nobody has to know that you didn't know it going in the door." What's more important is that you use whatever resources you have available to you to make it work.

Patriots position preview: Offensive line

Nate Solder now leads a veteran group.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

When it comes to offensive lines, it's not always about experience.

Take the Patriots offensive line, for example.

In last year's regular season, the Patriots ranked 28th in the NFL in experience, which is based on the combined career starts for the two guards, two tackles, and center on the offensive line with the most starts in the current season.

The number of starts for those players on the Patriots was 181. The team that ranked first was the Atlanta Falcons, with 481.

To compare the two teams' offensive lines a bit more, the Patriots allowed 24 sacks and 97 quarterback hits. The Falcons allowed 37 sacks and 106 QB hits.

The Falcons did average more yards per carry, however, 4.6 to 3.9.

So what does seem to matter most on an offensive line? One could argue continuity.

If you recall the season prior to that, the line was decimated, and it all came to a head against the Denver Broncos in the AFC Championship Game, when Tom Brady could barely find time to drop back before he was hit.

But that wasn't the case last season, as the Patriots really hit their stride as the season went along.

Though the Patriots were lucky to have their core starting line for most of the season, they also relied on some depth at certain points. Ted Karras and Cameron Flemming were two players who filled in occasionally.

"Ted played quite a bit for us early in the year," Bill Belichick said. "Cam started at left tackle for us in Arizona. So, early in the year, actually, we used more than just those five guys. So, you never know. Ted has played guard and center for us – primarily guard, but played center. . . . On the offensive line, you're one play away from not having the continuity of those five guys, so we have to prepare for that."

The good news for the Patriots is that the five starters from last year are all on this year's roster, too. And let's not forget the help they'll get from the tight ends, Rob Gronkowski and Dwayne Allen.

THE FAVORITES

LT Nate Solder
LG Joe Thuney
C David Andrews
RG Shaq Mason
RT Marcus Cannon
RG Ted Karras
LT Tony Garcia

Solder will remain the Pats most important offensive lineman, protecting Brady's blind side. He's also seen as their best offensive lineman after a nice bounce-back 2016 season coming off an injury-shortened 2015.

Consider Cannon one of the pleasant surprises on the team. After a relatively underwhelming beginning to his career, Cannon turned it around the last two seasons and inked a five-year, $32.5 million extension last November.

Thuney, Andrews, and Mason have made immediate impacts in their young careers and the expectation is that they'll hold onto their roles.

FANTASY BASEBALL: NEED WAIVER HELP? TARGET THESE GUYS

With the default trade deadline having passed on all of the major platforms, fantasy owners' sole recourse to improve their rosters down the stretch is our old friend, the waiver wire. It can be instructive to consult recent transaction trends, but sometimes it's better not to follow the wisdom of the crowds. Today, we'll discuss a few of the most popular pickups and whether or not you should be adding them to your roster.

For even more options to improve your roster, be sure to check out RotoBaller's waiver wire pickups list.

Eddie Rosario, OF, Twins

Rosario hasn't gone deep again since we talked about him last week, but he has logged three more multi-hit games in that time. The little-known outfielder has been among the game's best hitters in the second half, slashing .336/.375/.627 with six home runs and 39 R+RBI in 31 contests. An improved plate approach – he's shaved six percentage points off of his strikeout rate since the break – suggests a legitimate breakout could be in the offing. Add.

Cory Spangenberg, UTL, Padres

Like Rosario, Spangenberg is a low-profile player who has been quite productive recently. The Padres' Swiss Army Knife missed the first few weeks of the season and then stumbled out of the gate, hitting just .240/.262/.306 through June 8. Since then, he's produced a .295/.365/.505 line with 11 homers, five stolen bases, and 73 R+RBI in 59 games. Four of those home runs have come in the last week. Add.

Andrew Cashner, SP, Texas Rangers

In contrast to Bauer, Cashner has provided passable ratios this season despite never striking anyone out. His putrid 2.6 K-BB% is easily the worst of any regular starting pitcher this season. It's something approaching a miracle that he's produced a 3.31 ERA to this point. Limiting home runs has helped, but five of the 10 bombs Cashner has allowed have come in his last seven starts. Avoid.

Eddie Rosario might not hit it deep, but he does hit it often. GETTY IMAGES

Trevor Bauer, SP, Cleveland Indians

Bauer has reliably provided strikeouts in bunches all season, but it's only recently that he stopped wreaking havoc on fantasy owner's ratios. In a win over the Royals on Saturday, Bauer logged his fifth straight quality start and brought his ERA to a season-best 4.50. His peripherals don't look much different during this recent run, though, and given his well-established inconsistency, it's best not to put your faith in him. Avoid.

Red Sox set for big series against the Indians in Cleveland

MATTHEW BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

After taking two of three from the Yankees over the weekend, the Red Sox will begin a key four-game set in Cleveland Monday (7 p.m., NESN).

The Sox could very well meet the Indians in the playoffs for the second consecutive year as Cleveland owns a sizable lead in the AL Central.

Doug Fister (2-6, 5.56 ERA) will get the ball for the Sox on Monday and will be opposed by Mike Clevinger (6-5, 3.75 ERA).

After back-to-back outstanding starts in which he gave up an average of 2.5 runs, Fister came back to Earth last week against the same team he'll face Monday. The 33-year-old gave up five earned runs on seven hits in 4.1 innings of a 7-3 Red Sox loss to the Indians.

Boston Red Sox youngster Rafael Devers (right) has been a revalation for a team attempting to hold on to the top spot in the American League East. GETTY IMAGES

Eduardo Rodriguez (4-3, 3.97 ERA) is slated to start for the Sox Tuesday and will be followed by Drew Pomeranz (12-4, 3.31 ERA) and Chris Sale (14-5, 2.62 ERA) in the rotation.

DYNAMIC DEVERS

Rafael Devers continues to be a wunderkind for the Sox. The 20-year-old third baseman is batting .364 with a .424 OBP and has eight home runs and 16 RBI in the first 20 games of his MLB career. On Saturday against New York, Devers became the first player since Babe Ruth to belt home runs in three straight games against the Yankees before turning 21.

THE PRICE IS WRONG

David Price's 2017 season has gone completely off the rails. It was a horrible look on that Friday night a few weeks back when — at the height of the Dennis Eckersley controversy - Price missed a start at Fenway due to an elbow injury. Now, it's entirely possible that Price won't pitch again this season.

Price had to stop his most recent throwing session because of "continued stiffness" in his arm.

"There's still hope [for him to pitch again in 2017]," Red Sox manager John Farrell said of Price. "But I think we're also realistic here that he's got to build up to an aggressive long toss situation, not in terms of overall distance but number of throws with some aggression and build-back to the mound. That's going to take some time. I don't have a return date at all."

We are currently conducting a clinical research study of an investigational topical treatment foam for those that suffer from acne.

There is no cost to enroll in the trial. Participants who qualify will receive study-related evaluations and medication at no cost. Insurance is not required to participate and compensation for travel and time may be provided.

In addition to any relief you may receive from the study medication you are assigned to use throughout this research study, your participation may also help to answer important questions regarding the safety and effectiveness of the investigational medication. This could provide new information about the treatment for acne, which may help other patients in the future.

If you or someone you know is interested in taking part in this research study, please discuss it with your family and talk to your doctor.

Aries Do whatever it takes to avoid being faced with situations that are unpredictable or too demanding. Aim to add stability to your life and relationships.

Taurus Put any stubborn tendency to rest, or you will end up in an argument. Make practical requests when dealing with difficult individuals.

Gemini Make home and family your priorities. Listen carefully to what children or elders have to say. Clear up any confusion that may have occurred.

Cancer Business trips or events that include your peers will be taxing, but at the same time will show why it's important to participate. What you learn will be helpful.

Leo If something needs to be done, make it happen. Domestic and family unity will give you the strength to carry out whatever changes you deem necessary.

Virgo Secrets will not help you get what you want. An open discussion that leads to a fair solution will keep you in good standing with others and bring good results.

Libra Your participation in events that affect your environment, workplace or health will be gratifying. The physical contribution you offer will make a difference.

Scorpio Have a strategy in place. Don't be afraid to use unorthodox methods to get things done well and on time. Personal physical changes need to be monitored.

Sagittarius Information will be made available to you. Make sure the facts are correct and proceed to make decisions based on the material you receive.

Capricorn Avoid unstable situations and people. Use your intelligence and insight to make the best and safest choice. Contracts are best negotiated and handled personally.

Aquarius An unexpected opportunity will come along if you do things your way. Your innovative approach to work, your health and money or legal matters will pay off.

Pisces Keep demanding people at a distance. Taking care of business and completing what's expected of you should be your priorities. EUGENIA LAST
